

ForestCamping.com Features Thunder Basin National Grassland in Wyoming

Fred and Suzi Dow, publishers of ForestCamping.com, recently visited Thunder Basin National Grassland and are featuring this grassland on their website

Bisbee, AZ (PRWEB) December 07, 2011 -- ForestCamping.com, the comprehensive website for camping in national forests and grasslands, recently visited Thunder Basin National Grassland. It is featuring the grassland with detailed up-to-date camping information, photographs and a number of its dispersed camping locations.

Tucked into the northeast corner of Wyoming is 560,166 acres of wide open prairie with islands of pine-covered hills, Thunder Basin National Grassland does not have the developed recreation found in national forests. Instead, it is more like the Great Outdoors of old before the advent of today's hurry-up pace. "Wyoming is a beautiful state to begin with but Thunder Basin illustrates there is more to this state than Yellowstone National Park," stated Suzi Dow about her time in Thunder Basin National Grassland. "So much open space to enjoy and so few people to bump into while on this grassland. It's a great location to just get away from it all."

Thunder Basin National Grassland has no developed campgrounds, and that might deter some campers, but there are many dispersed camping opportunities. A few specific locations, such as Salt Well Picnic Area and Gibson Draw, are described in ForestCamping.com with GPS coordinates provided. It is recommended campers obtain a free Motor Vehicle Use Map from Thunder Basin National Grassland's Douglas Ranger District office to get around in the grassland.

Perhaps better known for the massive coal mines on its western boundary, Thunder Basin National Grassland provides the public a number of opportunities for recreation, including camping, hiking, sightseeing, hunting, off-highway riding, and fishing. It is a land that is a patchwork pattern of federal, state, and private lands, blending uses in ways to conserve and protect the land.

In addition to managing and developing the U.S. National Forest Campground Guide website, the Dows have also self-published eBook CDs and downloads of the U.S. National Forest Campground Guides. They are organized by geographic region, which can be purchased online at their website.

About ForestCamping.com

ForestCamping.com, the U.S. National Forest Campground Guide, is a complete and comprehensive guide to developed campgrounds in national forests and grasslands. It provides detailed information to campers looking to experience the great outdoors.

Fred and Suzi Dow, authors and publishers of ForestCamping.com, have devoted 17 years to visiting, personally researching, and providing the public with detailed information about 175 national forests and grasslands and over 2,400 personally surveyed campgrounds. ForestCamping.com focuses exclusively on national forests and grasslands and the camping available in them.

###

Contact Information

Suzi Dow

suzid@forestcamping.com

520-432-5783

Online Web 2.0 Version

You can read the online version of this press release here.